Re: Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs,
United States Department of Labor v. Google Inc.
Case No.: 2017-OFC-00004
Google's Request for Extension on Deadline to File
Motion

Dear Judge Berlin,

On behalf of Defendant Google Inc., we write to request a brief extension on Google's motion deadline. During the April 7, 2017 hearing, the Court set a briefing schedule, under which Google may file a motion under seal no later than April 14, 2017, and OFCCP would file its response a week after. Google respectfully requests that the Court move Google's deadline by two business days, to April 18, 2017, and OFCCP's deadline by the same amount of time, to April 25, 2017.

During the April 5, 2017 pre-hearing conference in this matter, the Court advised the parties that a hearing transcript may be available on April 12 or 13, 2017. However, as of this writing, Google has not received a transcript. Our understanding from speaking with the court reporter company is that the earliest Google will receive a transcript is Friday, April 14, 2017, the same day Google's motion is due.

Good cause supports Google's request. Portions of Google's motion are based on witness testimony and the Court's comments during the hearing. Without a transcript, Google is unable to verify the record. Furthermore, if the deadline is not moved, OFCCP will have an advantage over Google. Assuming the transcript is provided to Google at some point on April 14, 2017, Google would file its motion the same day, after only having the transcript for a few hours at most. OFCCP, in contrast, would have until April 21, 2017 to file a response, with the benefit of a week's time in possession of the transcript.

On April 13, 2017, counsel for Google emailed counsel for OFCCP to meet and confer regarding Google's request for an extension. Counsel for OFCCP has not responded to Google as of yet, so Google is unaware as to whether OFCCP opposes the present request.

Respectfully submitted,

JACKSON-LEWIS P.C.
